

Comparing psychological reactions of children with and without addicted parents in Tehran

Nazanin Farrokhi, Nooshin khademreza and Raoof Ghayoomi
Islamic Azad University, Iran

The object of this study is to compare the amount of psychological reactions of children with and without addicted parents in Tehran. The method of this study is causative-comparative. Research sample includes 60 persons (30 children with addicted parents and 30 non addicted parents children) They were selected through random and tree designation test has been done individually. Data were analyzed by multi-variances analysis . The results showed there is a meaningful difference among children by addicted parent and none addicted in stress, depression, quarreling indicators. Also, Children with addicted parents are more stressful, depressed, quarreling than children with none addicted parents.

Biography

Nazanin Farrokhi completed her MA in Clinical Psychology and currently working at Islamic Azad University Roudehen Branch, Roudehen, Iran.

Nooshin Khademolreza is working as a faculty member at Department of Social Psychiatry, Iran University of Medical Sciences (IUMS), Center of Excellence in Psychiatry, School of Behavioral Sciences and Mental Health, Tehran, Iran

Raoof Ghayoomi is working as a faculty member at Department of Social Psychiatry, Iran University of Medical Sciences (IUMS), Center of Excellence in Psychiatry, School of Behavioral Sciences and Mental Health, Tehran, Iran

nazaninfarokhi@yahoo.com

Notes: