EDITORIAL

The Journal of Hotel and Business Management publishes articles on a variety of themes, including hospitality, business management, and catering. Hotel management is a branch of the hospitality sector that oversees a variety of functions such as front-desk operations, catering, housekeeping, laundry, and labour management. General Manager, Guest Services Manager, Executive Housekeeper, Director of Sales & Marketing, Director of Food & Beverage, Director of Events & Catering, Hotel Controller, Director of Engineering, Director of Human Resources, Recreation Manager, and Chief of Security are some of the managerial positions that a skilled management professional may be assigned to, depending on the responsibilities.

A Hotel Manager's normal work activity is to provide clean, well-kept rooms to guests that meet their accommodation, food, and other hotel service demands. Customer inquiries regarding the company and its products or services, directing visitors, receiving mail and phone calls, and record-keeping are all part of the front-desk office/reception.

Other activities include security control, surveillance, and job verification. Catering comprises providing food and beverages to visitors while also adhering to hygienic and sanitation standards throughout a catering session. Buffets, partial-service catering, personal chef services, and self-catering are some of the several sorts of catering sites available, depending on the nature of the catering site.
